As with all previous Manifestations, Bahá'u'lláh faced vehement opposition and was exiled and imprisoned for over 40 years. Throughout all these hardships, He continued to proclaim His message of oneness and world unity. Bahá'u'lláh passed away in 1892. His life and teachings continue to inspire millions of people around the globe to contribute to the betterment of their individual and collective lives.

Bahá'u'lláh has proclaimed that humanity is now approaching its long-awaited stage of maturity: worldwide unity at the global level of society. He provides a vision of the oneness of humanity, a moral framework, and teachings that—founded on the harmony of science and religion—directly address today's problems. He points the way to the next stage of human social evolution. He offers to the peoples of the world a unifying story consistent with our scientific understanding of reality. He calls on us to recognize our common humanity, to see ourselves as members of one family, to end estrangement and prejudice, and to come together. By doing so, all peoples and every social group can be protagonists in shaping their own future, and, ultimately, a just and peaceful global civilization.
